U. E. LOYALISTS

Arrangements are being made to publish a "Book of Remembrance" of the celebration of the 140th anniversary of the settlement of Upper Canada by the United Empire Loyalists held at Belleville last June and an effort is being made to include with the book as extensive a list as possible of the names and addresses of descendants of the original United Empire Loyalists who are now living.

You will assist in this effort by sending to me the following information :

1. Names of all persons now living who claim to be descended from original United Empire Loyalists.

2. Their addresses.

3. Name of original United Empire Loyalist ancestor if you have it.

4. Any further information concerning Loyalist ancestor or family which you may have.

By the order-in-council passed November 9th, 1789, the first and only attempt was made to create a hereditary title in Canada. By this order-in-council a "Mark of honour" was conferred on the original United Empire Loyalists "and their prosterity." It will therefore be a matter of importance in the years to come to have as complete a knowledge as possible of the United Empire Loyalists.

Send to W. C. Mikel, Mayor of Belleville, Belleville, Ont., names and addresses of all descendants of United Empire Loyalists now living and also name of original Loyalist ancestor if you have same.

Kingston, Aug. 30.—The police have heard no word of David Tugwell and Harris Sheldon, the two men who left Oswego, N.Y., in a motor boat on Aug. 15 for Stella, Amherst Island, and have not been heard of since. The records show that the day on which they left was a fine one, but there may have been boat trouble and severe storms have been experienced since that time. More hopeful opinions give it that the two men had engine trouble and had taken shelter on the Duck Islands. Relatives are much concerned over their absence.

A GOLD RUSH OF 1864-65.

Most Readers Have Never Heard of Leechtown.

"Don't forget Leechtown in marking and preserving the historic spots of Canada," pleads a reader who formerly lived in British Columbia.

Pray what and where is Leechtown, will be asked by most readers, no doubt. It is a relic of the gold rush of, 1864-65 on Vancouver Island, and so great was the rush that the Governor of British Columbia moved there and lived in what was the first Government House of the colony, the ruins of which remain. For a time Leechtown had a larger population than Victoria, twenty miles away, the capital of the province. The rough-hewn log walls of the old house still stand stubbornly, but the roof has fallen in, and the ruin is mellowed and beautified by climbing vines and two gnarled old apple trees planted by the daughters of Governor Kennedy.

"The discovery which I have to communicate," wrote Dr. Brown, one of the discoverers, "is of the finding of gold on the banks of one of the forks of the Sooker river, about twelve miles from the sea in a straight line, and in a locality never hitherto reached by white man; in all probability never by the natives. I forward herewith an eighth of an ounce or thereabouts of the coarse—scale gold washed out of twelve pans of dirt, in many places twenty feet above the river, with no tools available but a shovel and pan. The diggings extend for 25 miles, and should give employment to more than 4,000 men."

There was the usual rush of gold-seekers, just as has happened in a score of other parts of the West on both sides of the line. Sturdy miners came with high hopes and abounding faith, and soon there were scenes such as Bret Harte pictures in his classics of Nevada camps. Nuggets running in value to $70 were picked up, and as much as $25 a day was earned by the miners. It is estimated that $30,000 had been taken out of the Leech in less than a month after the discovery was reported. The governor found it wise to follow his population, and the log Government House was built, and became for the time the capital of the colony. There was as yet no other Government House, for the Governor lived at the Hudson Bay Company's fort.

Romantic Claims to Vast Estates.

An eighty-two-year-old lawsuit has just been settled in Italy. It was started in 1841 by a man who claimed about $20,000,000 from the state on account of land which he alleged really belonged to one of his ancestors. Judgment has now been given against the claim, but the original claimant died long ago.

A Gretna Green marriage in 1840 resulted in a litigation which ended over thirty-five years. The husband, later on, repudiated his wife and child, and married again. At his death the son by the second marriage took possession of his father's estate. He alleged that his half-sister was illegitimate. She then instituted the lawsuit which was finally decided only a short time ago. The court held that the father's first marriage was legal, and that the daughter was entitled to the estates of $150,000. The latter is now eighty years of age.

In another case, lasting over half a century, both the principals and all the witnesses died before the settlement. The proceedings involved a claim to the land on which stands a flourishing American town. After fifty years of litigation a verdict was given in favor of the sixty-year-old daughter of the original claimant. She thus became worth $700,000.

All these cases are infants compared with a lawsuit which extended over five centuries. It was a claim for the stupendous sum of $1,000,000,000, and was made by the heirs of an Italian aristocrat whose possessions had been confiscated by the state in the sixteenth century. The claimants argued that the confiscation was illegal, but eventually the Naples Appeal Court decided against them.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

BY CHARLES G. TRUMBULL, Editor of The Sunday School Times.

JESUS HEALS A NOBLEMAN'S SON.

Sunday, Sept. 7.—John 4 : 46-54.

Golden Text.—I am the way the truth and the life—John 16:6.

What is a miracle? It is God doing something that man by himself could never do.

This is to be kept in mind as we study "again the second miracle that Jesus did, when He was come out of Judea into Galilee." He was back in "His own country," where He had lived a natural human life for thirty years, and where peculiar difficulties beset His ministry because "a prophet hath no honour in his own country" (verse 44). But whenever and wherever we come into touch with the Lord let us remember that He is "the same yesterday, today and forever," and if He worked a miracle once (in Cana or in His own life), He can work a miracle again in the same place.

A father's agonized cry for the life of a dying son greets Him this time in Cana, where last He was in the midst of a joyous wedding feast. Christ is at home in every phase of human life, and His miracle touch can conserve the joy of weddings and forbid the approach of funerals.

But our Lord's response to the father's cry for help seems strangely unsympathetic. "Except ye see signs and wonders ye will not believe." He said to the nobleman. Yet it only seemed unsympathetic; God who is love, can never fail to sorrow with us. He was testing and purifying the father's faith. As with Philip later (John 6 : 6), "And this He said to prove him; for He Himself knew what He would do." The nobleman was having his first lesson in the Christian schooling, "that the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ" (1 Peter 1:7).

The nobleman met the test in a very simple, beautiful and manly way. His faith in Christ not only was not shaken, but was deepened, for in appealing confidence he called upon the Lord "Sir, come down ere my child die."

Then came sudden amazing blessing: swift transition from test to triumph, from sorrow to satisfaction. "Go thy way; thy son liveth," was the "blessed assurance" from the lips of the Son of God. Yet even this was still a test. How could he know that his son lived? How could he be sure? He had nothing but the Word of God to rely on. Yes, that was enough. He met this final test triumphantly, "and the man believed the word that Jesus had spoken unto him, and he went his way."

That was walking in faith. It was what every Christian is to do. joined to do, in Colossians 2 : 6: "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in Him." When we believe every word that Jesus has spoken unto us and go our way, we shall be found as this nobleman was, with fresh evidences that our Saviour is a Lord whose Word is trustworthy.

But suppose, after Christ had said "Thy son liveth," the nobleman had not believed. What then? What if he had come back to his home in distrust and discouragement? Would he have found his little son alive and well? No! A thousand times No! The Son of God had given the man His word, "Thy son liveth," and God never breaks His word. "If we are faithless, He abideth faithful, for He cannot deny Himself" (II Tim. 2 : 13). But how sorry and ashamed the nobleman would have felt then not to have trusted Christ fully on the strength of His word alone. The nobleman did not grieve his Lord that way, as most of us have done. How patient and long-suffering the Lord is with us; and how gracious, in that so many of our blessings come in spite of our faithlessness and because of His faithfulness.

More often echo the very words of God, and here the nobleman's servants greet him with the glad news that had just fallen from the lips of Jesus—"Thy son liveth." A critical cross-examination of the servants, digging into the facts, not in doubt but in belief, produces abundant corroboration of the Son of God's pledged word. It will always have the same happy result. God is glad to have us study evidences and investigate and cross-examine and dig deep into everything connected with His word, and His Works, provided we do it as this nobleman did—in faith, not in unbelief. For the result always glorifies God, as did this investigation.

Now followed a climax of belief. Although this father had believed Jesus from the start, and had kept on believing through every trial of his faith, we are now told again that he "believed"—he was going on "from faith to faith," which is the normal Christian life.

But, best of all "himself believed and his whole house." That, again, is the normal experience for every believer. From the time when Noah entered the Ark, which was a type of Christ, with his whole family, on through the Bible to the Philippian jailer who was told by the apostle, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved, and thy house," and who "rejoiced, believing in God with all his house" (Acts 16 : 31-34), God's Word plainly shows that it is the privilege of every child of God to trust God for the salvation of every member of his or her family.

Have we the faith of the nobleman of Capernaum, of Noah, and of the Philippian jailer?

Although Alberta only became a province eighteen years ago, its population has increased fourfold, while the grain yield has increased twentyfold. The total agricultural products of Alberta in 1923 were worth $223,000,000.

The scheme for the settlement of British emigrants in Canada may assume a new aspect as a result of the presence in London, England, of the Hon. J. A. Robb, Canadian Minister of Immigration. Canada favors the movement of entire families to Canada from Great Britain, rather than that of single men.

Among the biggest muscallonge caught this year was one landed at the Canadian Pacific Railway's French River (Ont.) Bungalow Camp, by Samuel Franklin, Southern Sales Manager of Claflins, Inc., New York City. Mr. Franklin had a light tackle and had never hooked a lunge before. He had a hard fight to secure the fish, which tipped the scale at 38½ pounds.

A total of 13,748 Canadians, most of them native-born, has been repatriated from the United States during the months of April, May and June, according to figures announced by the Department of Immigration. During these three months 58,425 persons immigrated to Canada, which represented an increase of 13,292 over the same period of last year.

Marquis wheat, originated at the Dominion Experimental Farms and now world famous, has successfully invaded South America, being grown in the Argentine Republic last year with results that, according to authorities there, exceeded the expectations of the most optimistic advocates of the grain. Further shipments of seed are being made to the Argentine by the Canadian Seed Growers' Association.

One of the most diverse and interesting aggregations of passengers ever assembled in Canada left Montreal for Europe on August 20th aboard the Canadian Pacific liner Minnedosa. It included Majors S. de Beires and Brito Pais, who recently flew from Lisbon to Macao, China, a large party of scientists returning from the recent convention of the British Association for the Advancement of Science at Toronto, Colonel Geo. Ham, genial and internationally known "ambassador of the Canadian Pacific" and "Soldier" Jones, Canadian heavyweight boxer.

The first direct British cable service between Montreal and London was opened on August 18th by the Canadian Pacific Telegraphs. As business warrants, this service will be extended to embrace other Canadian cities with which it is now connected but which, as yet, cannot offer a reasonable return for a regular service. Messages were exchanged between the London Chamber of Commerce and the Montreal Board of Trade and between the Canadian and the English headquarters of the Bank of Montreal, conveying expressions of mutual goodwill and prophecying closer relations as a result of the improved cable facilities.

Canada's Oldest House.

Canada's oldest house, dating back to 1639, or only four years after the death of Champlain, has been handed over to the Province of Quebec as a valued public relic. It is located at Sillery, a few miles up the St. Lawrence from Quebec, the village with the big church on the point overlooking the river, between the city and the Quebec Bridge. The building was the first residence of the Jesuit Fathers at Sillery, ad was built by Father Masse, the first missionary who arrived in Canada, and M. Le Commandeur de Sillery. It has been given to the Province by the sons of the late Hon. R. R. Dobell, who was a Minister in the Laurier Cabinet of 1896. It will be under the care of the Commission of Historic Monuments lately created by the Taschereau Government.

The house is in good condition. "Our ancestors built like the Romans," says Hon. Adelard Turgeau, president of the Commission. "And there is very little work to be done to restore the old house."

This prized old building is located on historic ground in another respect. It is at the foot of the cape at L'Anse au Foulon, where Wolfe's soldiers arrived on the eve of the Battle of the Plains of Abraham, where they ascended the cliff and disturbed Vergor, the sleepy old commander of the guard, who escaped in his nightshirt, thus opening the way to the taking of Quebec and Canada. The Archivist of Quebec, Pierre Georges Roy, declares the Sillery house the oldest in Canada and the second oldest in North America, the first being in St. Augustine, Florida.

Primitive Gas Works.

Doniphan Lake in the State of Kansas and some of its tributary streams are said to be full of natural gas. On the frozen surfaces it is possible to have a fine bonfire by simply breaking the ice—and applying a match to the opening. For several winters it has been possible by this simple process to make the flames shoot up as high as a man and burn brightly for a few minutes. The fuel for these uncanny fires bubbles through the water all the year round; but it is only during the very cold winter nights that it is thus temporarily stored under the ice in bubbles or pockets, sometimes 10 or 20 yards in extent. By merely breaking the ice with the point of his skate, and applying a match, the skater has in a few seconds a roaring flame for light and heat.

LOWER SCHOOL EXAMINATIONS

The following are the results of the Lower School Examination held at the Napanee Collegiate Institute. First Class Honours are shown as 1, Second Class 2, Third Class 3, Pass † and Failed *. When no marks are given the subject was not taken by the candidate. There will be no Supplementary Examinations.

Certificates may be obtained from Mr. J. G. Fennell, Secretary-Treasurer of the Board of Education, at his office in the Town Hall.

A GREAT CATHEDRAL.

Greatest Undertaking by the Church Since the Reformation.

Cathedral building on a great scale has shown important revival of late in some United States cities, and now comes to England with the completion of the first part of the Liverpool Cathedral. This building is not only the greatest undertaking of the Church of England since the Reformation, but it will rank in size next to St. Peter's at Rome. Service may be its equal, but it will be bigger than Milan. York Minster is England's largest church at present, but Liverpool Cathedral will be found as big again. It will exceed St. Paul's by more than that, and it will be more than double Westminster Abbey in extent. It will be five times the size of Truro and three times that of the Roman Catholic Cathedral at Westminster. Such an achievement will be highly creditable to a seaport town which, though chartered by King John, dates as a great port from the end of the eighteenth century.

The creator of the Liverpool Cathedral, so far as design is concerned, is Giles Gilbert Scott, R.A., grandson of a famous architect, Sir Gilbert Scott, R.A., who gave to London two fine buildings, St. Pancras Station and the Foreign Office. As a young man Scott carried out the immense drawings for the cathedral, in the short time he was free from office work. He was occasionally late in the mornings, naturally enough, and drew down on his head gentle reprimands from an employer who considered he was misusing his spare time as other young men usually do.

Gothic forms have been used by the architect, but with a nobility, strength and impressiveness that is said to be new to England. Although only less than a third of the cathedral is built, and there is a temporary wall across the building, the visitor is at once impressed by the magnitude of the structure. Great piers rise up on all sides to the vaulting without a break. There are no detached columns anywhere, but everywhere strength and rich proportions the human being feels his proper smallness, but not to the extent of being loaf, as at St. Peter's; nor lifted up and his soul expanded, as should be the effect of all great architecture. The site is a romantic one, surrounded by the tombs on a hillside of Liverpool's greatest citizens, and in view from the great commerce of the river.

An Old Book.

An old book, dating from the thirteenth century, was found recently by the Norwegian Society for the Conservation of Historic Monuments. It was brought to light during the restoration of a church to light during restoration of a church in the small village of Hopstad, and has been taken to the University of Christiania, where a collection of antiquities is kept. The book is made up of thin beechboards bound together at the back and covered with wax. The boards are slightly raised to avoid sticking and to preserve the characters. The letters appear to have been traced on the wax with a fine needle. Although some portions of the inscriptions were written in recent times, most of them date back to the thirteenth century. Among other things it contains a list of names of animals in Latin and in old Norwegian.

Natural Result.

"Some men are doubtful when it comes to meeting their obligations," remarks an exchange. This may be because they are financially shy.

Ancients Had Cure for Fright.

The ancients believed that fright could be cured by taking a mixture of asparagus and white wine.

And Commercial Lines.

Soldier Ants.

Before the biological society in London a naturalist described his studies of the African termites, or white ants. Certain individuals in every nest have no other apparent function except that of fighters or soldiers. Some have a long beak from which they eject an acrid, corrosive fluid; others inspire terror by making a loud clicking noise with their mandibles; but they neither shoot nor bite. One singular observation of the naturalist was that the soldier ants, which rush out to defend an attacked nest, do not return to the nest, but wander about and soon perish from exposure to the outside air.

of the series dealing with the establishment of the BANK OF MONTREAL at representative points in CANADA and elsewhere

IN LONDON

ON Threadneedle Street, in the old City section of London, the financial heart of the British Empire, the Bank of Montreal has been representing the interests of Canada since 1870.

Its first London office was located at 27 Lombard Street. Later the Bank established an office at 47 Threadneedle Street E.C, afterwards extending its services to the Pall Mall section of London by creating an important branch at Waterloo Place in the heart of the theatre and shopping districts.

QUEBEC'S ANCIENT ELM.

Tree More Than Three Centuries Old Located at Sault-aux-Recollets.

The elm must have inspired early Norman church builders; those graceful spreading branches suggesting the stone-vaulted roof; and the stout trunk, a strong supporting column, says Allan Keefer in Forest and Outdoors.

At Sault-aux-Récollets, a village in Quebec, there is an immense elm that was a victorious young tree of some thirty years growth, when Champlain was there; and close to that same tree he attended the first mass to be held on the Island of Montreal, June 23rd or 24th, 1615.

Perhaps, elm trees associated with old France inspired those early pioneers of New France too—prompted them to hold their outdoor service near an elm of our virgin forest. Anyway, some French-Canadian, who might have worshipped in one of those Gothic churches back in the Old Country, placed a record of that service in the crotch of an elm; for a document setting forth the event, was discovered early in May of this year.

The Sault-aux-Recollets elm has suffered from the storms of the last few winters; so, this spring, it was found necessary to cut most of it down. It was then that a jar was found in a cavity at the junction of the great branches; and it contained a water-soaked parchment whereon faint traces of writing were indicated. After it was carefully dried a chemist finally succeeded in making most of the writing clear; and the record, for such it proved to be, read as follows:

"In the presence of Father Jamay and of Champlain—a mass of actions of grace—at which were present seven Frenchmen, 12 Cree children, six Algonquins—chanted and spoken by Father Le Caron—"

Opinions differ as to the age of the document; some authorities think that it was placed in the elm in 1615; others, that the record is a copy of the original and that the jar was hidden in a fork of the tree some years after the event. However, according to Abbe Laverdiere's History of Canada, it is an established historical fact that Champlain did attend that service at Sault-aux-Recollets, 309 years ago in June; and, that the ceremony was held near the now famous elm.

To-day, that great trunk stands a still living monument to those splendid pioneers. It is more than five feet in diameter; and its age, computed from the annual rings of one huge branch, is 340 years.

 Editors' Soft Hearts.

Editors are hard and cruel, say some people, especially the evildoers, who do not want their lives exposed. But there is often a softening and stretching of conscience so far as duty is concerned, if we are to accept the statements of the editor of the Smith's Falls (Ont.) Record-News, who thus philosophizes on his place in the sun:

If a young fellow goes out into the world and gets into trouble, the home newspaper says he was a good boy who evidently got led astray. If the town's tight-wad who hugged his nickels to his bosom in life dies, the newspaper throws a mantle over him, and says he hated wastefulness and that had a tendency to make him over-careful. If the town gossip dies the paper carefully avoids referring to the outstanding weakness by saying he lived a good life. If the home team goes away from town and gets badly licked the editor carefully states that it was the junior team, as the seniors could not get away. The editor does not lie from choice. The truth struggles in his breast the same as it does in the Sunday school teacher, but the pride for his community makes him as he is—and he prevaricates to save the local pride of the town. Still it's a great life if only one can stand it for a while, but oh! my what a lot a fellow has to carry unsaid.

Both Won.

Siwash Indians Sorrowful

The relentless march of civilization is slowly, but surely and steadily, forcing Nature's youngest children to fall back at the approach of those twin gods, Efficiency and Progress, says Norman French in a Toronto paper. Day by day the cohorts of Commerce advance and a passive race in peaceful haunts is forced back another step.

It is the Paleface's ambition to push on!
It is the Red Man's destiny to give way!

To-day there are five survey parties in the field in British Columbia, laying out the lines of new reserves, and re-staking the boundaries of forty-four of the existing reserves. Work has commenced in the Vancouver, New Westminster, Yale, Kootenay and Okanagan districts, and it will be two years before the surveyors finish their task, somewhere in the far northern lands.

The re-staking of boundaries does not always mean that the reserve will be made smaller, though such will be the case in a majority of the southern settlements, where there is more land than the Indians can economically occupy. The laying out of new reserves is a preliminary to the breaking up of old home ties for groups which have dwindled with the passing of years. Some of these groups can muster less than half a dozen individuals, and there are quite a number with not more than half a dozen. The strongest numerically are the Tsimpsheans of Port Simpson, who total over seven hundred.

Haidans, Tsimpsheans, Wakashans, Kootenians and Salishans, are the five stocks of British Columbia Indians, usually referred to by the common name of "Siwashes." There is a sixth stock, the Athapascans, which roams in the far north, but these nomads are more closely related to the plans Indians than to the Siwashes.

The Siwash is short, thick-set, small in thigh and leg, with large chest and arms. His big, square, flat face seems to rest on his square shoulders. He is slow of movement and phlegmatic in temperament. It is often difficult to tell a Siwash from a Japanese, though as a general thing, the Indian is heavier and coarser. The striking resemblance would seem to strengthen the contention of some ethnologists that the coast Indian is of Mongolian origin.

Though not so picturesque as the prairie Indians, the Siwashes are, sociologically speaking, on a higher plane. Since the coming of the white men they have been, on the whole, peaceful and industrious. Fishing and trapping are their chief industries, and as these demand a definite and constant stopping-place, the Siwash has come to look upon his reserve or his native village very much as the white man looks upon his home.

Whenever the Siwash is forced to migrate because of the encroachments of the white men, he moves with sorrow in his heart. The breaking of old ties hits him hard, and it is small comfort to know that there is better soil or bigger fish at the new place. He has been content with his little lot, and changes make him unhappy.

Chief Jim Harry, of the Squamish tribe, was born on the south shore of Burrard Inlet sixty years ago, long before there was a Vancouver. Now, to link the great city with North Vancouver, a bridge is to span the half mile of water at the Second Narrows, and the logical place for the north abutment is on Chief Jim Harry's land.

The old man is deeply distressed. Narrow-guage locomotives belch smoke around his cabin. His vegetable patch has degenerated into a gravel pit. His orchard is scarred and gouged; great welts of raw earth disfigure his pasture.

With a great deal more emotion than one usually expects of the stoic Indian, Chief Jim Harry expressed his point of view to a white friend recently:

"Where can I find another home like this? Here I was born and here I was raised, and here I have lived these sixty years. I have hunted deer on those hills. I have trapped bear in those gullies. Here in this creek I caught salmon.

"True, I can have money, but what of it? I am an old man, and an Indian. At sixty even the white man does not think only of dollars. For my part, I have enough for my simple needs, and this fortune will make no difference.

"For my orchard they offer $22,000. For all my land they are willing to pay $100,000. The money is with the Indian agent, and they are arbitrating. His decision is my law. But I would much rather not have the money. These rugged acres mean a great deal to me, and I took sinful pride in that orchard. You see, this has always been my home, and it is hard, very hard, to have to move out."

A pathetic scene in the tragedy of the life of the passing race was enacted in North Vancouver recently, when the bones of honored dead were exhumed with impressive ceremonies, and prepared for reburial in the pretty little village of Stawamus, far from the incessant clash and strife of modern times. The ceremonies, conducted at break of day, were witnessed by a large assemblage of Indians, but only two white men were privileged to attend, one being the Indian agent, and the other the Chief Factor of the Native Sons of B. C., who placed a spray of flowers on the caskets as token of sympathy.

Iceland's Troubles.

To support their currency the Government of Iceland prohibited all imports after May 1st. This means that Icelanders must return to nature and live on their own resources. For instance, when the stock of shoes and boots is all used up, they must wear home-made shoes made from seal and walrus leather. As imported clothing will soon be exhausted they must adopt homespun wool clothes, and generally revert to the type of life their ancestors followed before the invention of machinery. The prohibition of imports means retrogression of four centuries.

NAPANEE BRANCH McINTOSH BROS. 'PHONE 359.

ONLY WOMAN RAG DEALER.

Young New York Girl Has Business Turnover of $80,000.

Miss Caroline Horowitz, a 26-year-old New York girl is perhaps the only woman rag dealer on this continent. Her business turnover last year was $80,000.

She was literally brought up on the rag business, for she has been working at it since she was 16. To a writer in Success Magazine Miss Horowitz recently told how she came to achieve such a success in her unusual calling.

"When I was a little girl," she explained, "father started this business on a small capital; hired a cellar; installed one washing machine, and experimented with different chemical combinations for cleansing greasy rags used in machine shops. You see, his idea, then, was to wash these rags and return them to the companies—sort of a super-laundry.

"After washing rags for a year, my father began washing new rags, cleaner ones. I mean, and selling them to machine shops. The character of the business changed, you see, to a sales concern. But that's how we made our name—by washing oily rags—and doing it well! Doing it a little bit better than the other fellow. (I hope.)

"Well, after I was sixteen, my brother, older than I, said that I could make myself useful around the office, if I was determined to go into business, by writing letters for him and doing odd office jobs. I was useful, you see, even though I was a member of the family—I mean he didn't have to find some special job for me to do, because I could do typewriting and dictation. My father had died, and I wanted, oh, so much, to help take his place.

"One day (I was eighteen then), I came to the office with my brother. On the way, he stopped at a building where there were offices of several of our customers. He had with him samples, cards; I knew our prices.

"'Let me try,' I asked.

"He did. And I secured an order the very first thing. That spurred me on. I've been at it ever since.

"We don't buy rags by the carload as a usual thing, my brother and I," said Miss Horowitz, "we buy by the boat load, by the ton, preferably. Right now, we have a cargo of fifteen tons en route from Smyrna, Egypt. It isn't the price of the rags themselves, primarily, that counts in the wholesale rag business, but the cost of labor attached in cleaning, sterilising and delivering.

"That price, like any commodity on the market, fluctuates. In summer, rags are cheapest. They are easier to secure than in winter; they're not so scarce. The weather is a factor. Prices run from cheap rags at nine cents a pound to seventeen cents for better grades. Cheesecloth costs thirty-five to sixty-five cents a pound."

What He Needed.

Tamworth 13, Wolfe Island 14.

The play-off in the baseball games between Tamworth and Wolfe Island teams took place at the Napanee Driving Park on Monday afternoon with a splendid attendance of fans to watch the game. Early in the game Wolfe Island secured a lead of three runs which put Tamworth on their mettle to overcome. Twice the score was tied, but Tamworth could not get a lead over their opponents and at the end of the first half of the ninth innings the score was 13 all. Wolfe Island then went to bat and secured the winning run.

Looking for His Daughter.

Chief Barrett has an interesting case to handle in connection with the Children's Aid Society. Some ten years ago the Children's Aid Society took a small child from a woman in the county and placed it in a Government institution. Shortly afterward the institution placed the little girl with foster parents. This week the father of the child, who is a resident of Carthage, N.Y., and who is applying for a divorce from his wife, was making inquiries concerning the child and on inquiring at Kingston was sent to Napanee, where Mr. Barrett showed him the records of the case and is applying to the institution where the child was placed, to place the girl who will now be about 12 years of age. The father states that he is an American citizen, that the little girl was born in the United States and that ten years ago the mother ran away with the child. He has been searching for the child for ten years and was thankful that he has at last received information that may lead to the recovery of his long lost daughter.

The Brethren will leave Lodge Rooms at 2.30 p.m. and be accompanied by the Kingston Salvation Army Band and march to Riverside cemetery. At 3 p.m. the memorial services to the deceased brethren will be conducted. Bro. Anderson, K.C., Lindsay, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge, I.O.O.F., will be present and will deliver the address. In case of rainy weather arrangements have been made to hold the services in the Armouries at 3 p.m., Sunday.

KINGSTON ALSO PROTESTS :
FINAL DECISION RESERVED

Oshawa, Aug. 31.—When the protest committee convened here on Saturday afternoon to deal with Peterboro's protest against Kingston, champions of the Central Ontario Baseball League, this committee found itself facing a counter-protest lodged by Kingston against Peterboro'.

The Peterboro' club alleged that pitcher Kelly and Catcher Rice, of the Limestone City, were ineligible under the O.B.A.A. residence rule. Kingston in turn filed a counter-protest on the residence qualifications of Pitcher Serth of the Liftlock City. Peterboro had a letter from the Deputy Minister of Colonization and Immigration Department, Ottawa, that both Kelly and Rice entered Canada the first week in May.

In view of the conflicting evidence the committee decided to have both the players in question appear personally on Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock, when both protests will be considered.

Shot Himself While Hunting.

Robt. Howitt, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Howitt, met with an accident on Monday morning which may cost him his life. While out hunting in Blute's woods with Master Cliff. Walker, the Howitt lad, in climbing through the fence dragged his gun behind him with the result that it exploded. The bullet passed through his hand and into his body, lodging close to his heart. The lad was taken to Kingston General Hospital in Martin's ambulance, where his condition is serious, but hopes are entertained for his recovery.

SIDE NOT SHOWN TO PUBLIC

Grover Cleveland's Talent as Mimic Known to Few Who Admired His Recognized Statecraft.

While I am reminiscing about my relations with Mr. Cleveland, I will just add about ten years and speak of a visit he paid me for three days during March, 1903.

He was to deliver an address at the Henry Ward Beecher memorial meeting in the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Sunday evening, and he arrived from Princeton on Saturday. He was like a boy out of school.

We were going to the theater on Saturday evening, and I suggested Justin McCarthy's "If I Were King," played by Sothern.

"I hope it is not sad," he said. "I want to see it from start to finish;" and, with a smirk, he added: "For I am a hayseed." I discerned afterward that he would rather have seen a comedy or vaudeville.

When we got to the theater many in the audience recognized him, and heads were constantly turning in the direction of our box. I mentioned it to him, but he said:

"Oh, no; they don't know me any more."

After the theater we had a supper of delicatessen and beer at home, which I knew he would like, and he amused us with several funny stories and mimicry. My wife remarked that he might have made a success on the stage, and he replied that his friend Joe Jefferson had often deplored his having missed that profession.

He mimicked the humorous Congressman Campbell of New York, who used to come to the White House, and pointing to the room occupied by Cleveland, asked the clerk, "Is his royal nibs in?" And sometimes Tim Campbell made requests that Cleveland had to deny as unconstitutional; then Tim would come back with: "Oh, I wouldn't let the Constitution stand between friends!"—Oscar S. Straus in the Outlook.

EXTRACTS FROM THE ADDRESS OF REV. T. ALBERT MOORE, D.D.

IN GRACE CHURCH, SUNDAY EVENING.

One will say what of bootleggers ? There is bootlegging, altogether too much of it, but what are the effects. There is more bootlegging in the Provinces of Quebec under Government Sale than there is in Ontario under the Temperance Act. In a speech a short time ago by Mr. Wm. Stevens he said, "Never before has drunkenness been prohibited as it is now, so if you want it to increase in this province, repeal the Temperance Act. For every one we have drunk there will be ten if the Temperance Act is repealed. We have only one in Ontario and ten in Quebec. The Temperance Act is not a failure, it is a success. It has taken away from our places the class so common in the days of the bar-room. There was a drunkard's home in every village. Now we travel up and down our province and we do not see these."

In Vancouver in the jail for prisoners that were intoxicated the yearly average incarceration under Prohibition was 511 persons and that went to 1565 after Prohibition, under the Government sale the incarceration was 1565 persons, an increase of over 200 per cent.

In New Westminster, B.C., the incarceration in the penitentiary under Prohibition was 61 persons and the year after, under Government sale the incarceration of the same penitentiary was 173 persons, an increase of 85 per cent.

What are we going to do about this matter ? The Government has stated that we are going to vote, but the questions are not published yet, but the vote is going to be on the value of the Ontario Temperance Act. I wonder, if any of us think that we dare go back to the old days. I have been in your town a lot of times and have seen things which I do not see today, because of the Ontario Temperance Act. Get organized in your town. See to it that every man and woman who is a British subject and who has lived for a year in the Dominion and three months in this locality and is 21 years old, has their name on the Voter's List. Get your name on the List, then when you hear people say "Oh ! it is a failure," do not be like the little birds, but look them straight in the eyes and ask them for the facts. Make them give you the facts. It is not true. There is not one man drunk today to ten in the old days. Think of the attractive bar-rooms with their large plate glass mirrors and their bars. Think of the shops and clubs and how easy it was to get liquor. There is not one boy tempted in this way today. That is what the Temperance Act has done for us. Get the facts. Get every voter to see the effect of the Ontario Temperance Act. The only votes that will be counted in this serious, but hopes are entertained for his recovery. ballot box. Put in your vote.

In the Campaign when we had four questions given us by the Hearst Government we had a majority of 47,000 in favour of the Temperance Act. In the vote against important matters in the province we had a majority of 300,000. I am looking forward with confidence to the strong-minded, Christian people of the Province of Ontario will roll up a victory for Prohibition of half a million on October 23rd.

Will you in Napanee stick together for the victory for the boys, for the girls, for the homes, industry, commerce, for our country, for God and for our people.

Will you stand for it ?

LAST OF GANG OF "BAD MEN"

How Citizens Wiped Out the "Dalton Crowd" When They Raided Coffeyville, Kansas.

Among the many desperadoes who menaced the public in the then territory of Oklahoma in the late eighties and early nineties was the notorious "Dalton gang," consisting of Bob, Grat, Emmett and Bill Dalton, aided by various confederates, prominent among whom were Dick Broadwell and Bill Powers, says E. A. Brininstool in Adventure Magazine. Bill Dalton had no hand in the final raid of the outlaw band on the two banks at Coffeyville, Kan., October 5, 1892.

The Dalton gang rode into Coffeyville, being reinforced in this raid by Powers and Broadwell. They trotted their horses boldly down the main street, the Dalton brothers wearing false beards, as they were well known in the town. They were recognized, however, by a merchant named McKenna, who quickly spread the alarm that "the Daltons were in town on mischief."

Meantime the bandits had entered an alley in the rear of one of the banks. Here they tied their horses and prepared for action. Grat Dalton, Powers and Broadwell entered the C. M. Cofidon bank, while Bob and Emmett hastened into the First National bank across the street. The officials of both banks, when intimidated with guns, blandly informed the robbers that the time lock in the vaults would not be off for 15 minutes. The bandits waited.

During this wait the town was arming itself, and bullets began to fly through the windows of the Condon bank. In the First National about $2,000 in greenbacks was secured and stuffed into a grain sack, and Bob and Emmett Dalton escaped to the alley by a rear door. Here they were joined by the other bandits, who had secured about $3,000.

A terrific fight took place in and near this alley, three or four citizens being killed and several wounded. John Kloehr, a liveryman, killed Bob and Grat Dalton, and Powers was also shot dead. Broadwell was fatally wounded and was found dead just outside town. Emmett was seriously shot, but recovered and was sentenced to the penitentiary for life, but was pardoned in 1907 and is now living a respectable life. Bill Dalton was killed in the Indian territory in 1894 while resisting arrest.

Only Fault They Don't Have.

We have memories of depression about our dear old ladies in the electric limousines, as they lumber down the wrong side of the street and negotiate the turns in their own independent way, when we feel that all can conscientiously say for them is that so far as we know, they never drive when under the influence of liquor.—Ohio State Journal.

Kitty's Regular Attitude.

Eleanor, accompanied by a pet kitten, was playing on the sidewalk. A stray dog came up to them with which Eleanor immediately became friendly. Meanwhile the kitten proceeded to swell up and spit, showing usual cat-dislike for a dog. Eleanor, noticing the cat's apparent displeasure, said: "Look at that, will you? She always acts like that when I speak to a dog."

Gladstone's Umbrella.

Gladstone's umbrella is a catch phrase for the Gladstonian policy. When in September, 1885, Mr. Gladstone issued his manifesto to the Midlothian electors, it was said that he "opened his umbrella." His ministry were said to shelter under his umbrella, and that is why in caricature he was frequently shown with a "gamp" under his arm.

Some wives dig into a man's pocket for what others make him dig. If you wanted to cure your husband of gambling in stocks, and at the same time keep his money in the family, how would you do it ?

Leatrice Joy, as the wife of a stock gambler, shows one way in the intensely interesting Paramount domestic drama of New York life, "THE SILENT PARTNER."

Also a good Comedy.

FRIDAY and SATURDAY

See Pola Negri soaring to untouched heights of emotion. In the most powerful series of scenes ever flashed on the screen ! "THE CHEAT" will be branded in your memory in a never-to-be-forgotten way. And you'll remember the happy ending for days and days.

Also a 2-reel Comedy.

MONDAY and TUESDAY

All kinds of chains and tires and devices have been patented in the hope of keeping automobiles from skidding on slippery pavements, but the difficulty encountered by Larry Semon during the filming of "THE GIRL IN THE LIMOUSINE," was to force a heavy limousine to skid around in two complete circles.

The story calls for a wild chase of a motorcyclist after fleeing robbers in a limousine and, the huge car was supposed to skid at the foot of a hill, whirl around in two circles and then dash ahead. It took forty tries and many hundreds of feet of film before the camera finally caught the thrill to the satisfaction of Semon, who acted as director of the picture as well as star.

Also a special Comedy.

PROPOSE TOLL OF 2 CENTS A GALLON ON GAS USED BY ONTARIO MOTORS.

Toronto, Aug. 29.—The Globe today says : After some years of discussion on the subject, observation of its effects in the United States, and tabulation of statistics and reports thereon, Ontario is at last going to have a gasoline tax. At least, this new form of taxation, it was said, is going to be submitted for Legislative approval at the coming session.

TAX ON WHOLESALERS

The tax which is to be proposed in Ontario will amount, it is understood, to two cents on every gallon, and instead of being imposed at the retail end of the distribution system, will be imposed upon the wholesalers, who handle the commodity in hundred thousand gallon lots. It is said that the Government will take steps in connection with the new system of taxation to see that the consumer does not pay more in respect of gasoline than the actual two cents levied.

Although Hon. G. S. Henry, Provincial Minister of Public Works and Highways, did not specify a gasoline tax in his recent address at the Exhibition, he made a statement that the government would have to secure additional revenues from the motorists with which to maintain the highway system.

INCREASED REVENUE.

After due consideration it is understood that the gasoline tax method has received tentative approval over and above a considered move of raising the existing license fee schedule. It has that a two-cent tax would bring in from $2,000,000 to $3,000,000 additional Provincial revenues each year.

Popular Prisons.

A new system of prison-discipline is being tried out at Peterhead, the Scottish convict prison.

"Non-commissioned officers," graded as in the army, and wearing the stripes of their "rank," have been appointed from among the convicts themselves. They move freely about the prison buildings, are put in charge of other convicts, and report breaches of discipline to the warders.

Evening classes, at which all the teachers are convicts, and concerts, also run by the prisoners, are other features of the new regime. Games are played in the prison yard, with convict "N.C.O.'s" as referees or umpires.

Serbia, however, has probably the most popular prisons in the world. The convicts are allowed to go out for the day. There is no fear of their escaping, as they are better fed and housed in prison than at home.

"Make the most of this, my boy; you won't live so well again," one old woman was overheard saying to her convict son when she visited him in prison.

Suicide Among Musicians Rare.

It has been found that suicide is very uncommon among musicians. Schumann attempted it, and it is also recorded of Tschaikowsky, but cases of musicians who have killed themselves are very rare. It is said that these facts are so, because of the mental composure and balance fostered by music.

Constapt Parade.

Elizabeth lived in a small place. The only times she'd ever seen a large crowd was on the occasion of circus or local parades. The first two days in a large city were spent in awe. The next day, turning to her mother, she said: "Oh, mother, they have a parade here all the time, don't they?"

Testing Water.

To test water—almost fill a clean pint bottle with water and add half a teaspoonful of granulated sugar to it. Cork tightly and keep in warm place for two days. If at the end of that time the water has become cloudy or milky, it is unfit for domestic use.

To W. J. SHANON, ESQ.,
Treasurer of the County of Lennox and Addington :

County of Lennox and Addington,
TO WIT :

The lists of lands liable to be sold for arrears of taxes in the year 1924 showing the amount due against each lot or parcel of land set opposite to the same, having been submitted to me in duplicate and in accordance with section 142, Cha. 195, R.S.O., 1914, of the "Assessment Act," and each of the said lists having been vised by me, I hereby authorize and commend you, William James Shannon, the Treasurer of the County of LENNOX AND ADDINGTON to levy upon the respective lands specified therein for the arrears and costs due thereon.

CANUCKS AT WEMBLEY

CAN'T LOOK AT OUR EXHIBITS AND REMAIN MODEST.

Canada's Big, Beautiful Building With Its Display of Dominion's Resources and Achievements is Outstanding at Great Empire Exhibition in Britain—A Credit to Our Representatives.

Ill-becoming it may be, to boast, let the justification be what it may, of one's own land as compared with others of the great family of nations that comprise the British Empire, writes R. E. Knowles in Toronto Star Weekly.

But the Canadian who would not thus vaingloriously err should turn aside from the showplaces of the Dominion which is known as the Canada Pavilion at the great Exposition of Empires, which has been opened in the London suburb, Wembley, to be known to all future generations as the site of the greatest exhibition yet devised by man. For to see it, or to compare it with the rival handiworks of other overseas colonies or dominions, will assuredly compel a sense of pride impossible to be repressed. And, further, the Canadian who would cultivate a due humility should discourage all converse with others who, having seen them all, voices his comparative opinion. Almost all such, Londoners, whom I have met over here, ungrudgingly award the palm to the fair daughter of empire of the western hemisphere.

Twice already have I visited the great show, and increasing scrutiny of Canada's presentation of her case only increases my pride and wonder. The pavilion itself is a whole structure, substantial enough looking to give promise of a life-era which that of the Dominion whose resources and achievements it so abundantly reveals. Every department of Canadian possession and product and performance seems to stand out by itself in convincing splendor. No need to pause to point out the array of manufactured articles, especially in wood and iron, that are to be seen there—suffice it to say the number and variety of these are a credit to the enterprise and public spiritedness of the manufacturers of Canada.

But how could one begin to give even a bird's-eye view of this assembled evidence of the wealth and industry of Great Britain's greatest Dominion beyond the bounds of ocean? The mineral display, to begin with, is an eye-opener even to the most sophisticated Canadian, to say nothing of the stranger and foreigner. The titanic silver nugget, from the Cobalt Keeley mine, two and one half tons in weight and valued at $16,800, bids fair, from what I hear, to become one of the most notable exhibits in all this oceanic collection from every quarter of the globe. The great smelter at Trail, B.C., blazens forth the might of the mineral industry. The universities, from Halifax to Vancouver (to leap swiftly from one department to another) are set forth after a fashion, significant of number and diversity, that will revise the opinions of thousands as to the intellectual enterprise of our lands, so imperfectly known as that laudable spirit is at present. Turn yourself about for a moment—and splendid panoramic pageanting recite the story and the development of our so youthful land. Prairie wheat fields, vast and rustling and clamant, stand in order before you; the mammoral method reveals the glories of our fruit orchards and eastern farms. A little further on, the fisheries of Canada, attested by the finest trophies of the great industry, are disclosed in a manner befitting their extent and variety. The Rocky Mountains—Jasper Park in particular, I recall—gleam in kaleidoscopic vividness, the very animals prowling about to quicken the pulse of the English big game hunter, his thoughts hitherto concentrated exclusively in India or Africa. But enough of catalogue, by the way, with real water, play their part in the convincing whole.

Montreal harbor, outlined in the largest photograph ever taken, 40 feet in length, is alone worth a trip to see. The lumbering industry, too, is fittingly and originally presented, sections of the giant denizens of the forest having been brought over to bewilder unaccustomed eyes. A miniature of Niagara Falls, especially when electrically illumined, startles by its vivid veri-similitude. The Prince of Wales' prairie home smiles at you, like its royal master, with quiet charm. Of butter—yes, real butter—is it modelled. The native grown and manufactured tobacco exhibit is worthy of its fragrant theme. The world's greatest annual exhibition, Toronto's pride, tells forth its wondrous tale. Pictures of live stock, grazing and otherwise; the could storage activities of various packing companies; the salmon-canning of British Columbia; the complete furnishing of a home, ingeniously set off in contrast to an Indian wig-wam; the Canadian elevator and milling industries, the latter contributed to by every flour firm in Canada; the motor cars of our own manufacture; the array of safes and engines; the serried specimens of priceless furs—all these and hundreds of other departments which cannot now be cited, conspire to make this unique assembling one of which

YOU CAN GET RID OF DYSPEPSIA

By Taking the Fruit Treatment in the Form of "Fruit-a-tives"

You can get rid of the pain; the heavy, uncomfortable feeling; the bilious attacks, headaches and constipation that accompany Dyspepsia.

The Fruit Treatment—which is the intensified juices of apples, oranges, figs and prunes combined with tonics —will always relieve Dyspepsia.

Mrs. Thomas Evans, Everett, Ont., says: "I have been troubled for years with Dyspepsia, Liver and Kidney Disease from which it was impossible to get relief until I took "Fruit-a-tives". Thanks to their wonderful results, I am free of these ailments and am in normal health again."

This is the kind of proof that convinces. The Fruit Treatment—"Fruit-a-tives"—is sold by all dealers at 25c. and 50c.—or sent postpaid by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa, Ont.

EARLY NEWS METHODS.

Veteran Telegrapher Tells of Developments of Past Century.

Measuring the advance of science in the more easy and the more astounding when put alongside the life of one man. Thus the recollections of R. F. Easson, a veteran telegrapher and telegraph official of Toronto, as published in the Canadian National Railways Magazine, cover much of the important developments of the past century. Mr. Easson is now 86 years old, and, happily, still alive. When he commenced work for the Montreal Telegraph Company even lamps were unknown; candles were in general use. He celebrated the news in 1858 that the Atlantic cable had been laid, by row upon row of candles on planks set in front of the office windows. Alas, the cable proved to be a failure, but the illuminations were declared "wonderful."

"It is a long road from candles to electric lights, and from stage coaches to airplanes, but I am happy that I have travelled it," says Mr. Easson. "The period was an interesting one. It marked the world's greatest strides in the annals of mankind, and in no place could one keep in closer touch with the march of events than at the keys of a press telegraph instrument."

It is 75 years since Mr. Easson began as a messenger boy, in 1849, and the officers of the permanent force at the Old Fort were among the best customers of the telegraph company. He had to walk out there two or three times a day with messages. It was a long walk for a boy of twelve, but I used to amuse myself on the way by shooting snipe and plover."

In those days there was no Associated Press, and no wires into newspaper offices. "On days of publication, for there were no daily papers in Toronto then, the editor would come to the office and crowd about the table as the news came in and I read it off the tape. Frequently, when there was some political news that would please him, George Brown would give a 'Hal' of satisfaction. As all the editors did not see eye to eye in political matters, there usually followed a hot, and sometimes acrimonious, argument across the table. In the meantime the news, no matter how important it might be, would wait until one side or the other was utterly confuted."

From his own experience Mr. Easson recalls opening the telegraph office at Father Point. "It was situated in a lighthouse, and I was lighthouse-keeper-operator and agent all in one. As the transatlantic packets would sail up the river the pilot would come off a tin cylinder with a red flag attached to it, and my pressboat, manned by two former sailors, would row back pilot, flag and mail back to sea. Inside the cylinder would be three manifold copies of European events, written in London just before the boat sailed.

"News of the shooting of Lincoln in 1865 and of the assassination of Prince McGee in 1868 are events which Mr. Easson cherishes in his memory. Gordon Brown, brother of George, went over from the Toronto Globe and waited while the London despatch was being copied, and wrote an editorial on it while he waited."

Ching Family Treasure.

Accumulated treasure of thirteen generations of the Ching family, the last ruling dynasty of the Chinese Empire, are being sold to meet the family debts. The Republican Government agreed to give a large annual appropriation to the Emperor when he abdicated the throne, but no payments have been made in the last four years, and the former royal family is now living almost in poverty, although possessing priceless works of art. Now the treasure vaults are being opened by eunuchs of the retired court. Pictures, lacquered wares, carvings, precious stones, ceramics, and gold and silver utensils are being offered for sale. The first of the treasures to be placed on the market are worth about $5,000,000. The Ching family prefers that the bulk of the treasures be sold to some person or group of persons who will deposit the rare work of art in museums instead of re-selling them as curios, to be scattered throughout the world.

Before the dawn of the motor-car age, a passing motorist picked up a farmer who had never before seen an automobile. The farmer was duly impressed and delighted. To impress him still more the motorist put his foot on the accelerator, and for six or seven miles they tore along like the wind. Then something went wrong with the steering-gear and they ran into a tree. The farmer and motorist alighted unhurt on a bank of moss. The car was not damaged.

"That was fine," said the farmer, as he got up. "We sartinly went the pace. Tell me this, though—how do you stop her when there ain't no trees?"

Escaped.

The Welcome Sign

"NOBODY asked you, sir" said the coy maiden. And in matters of buying, as well as in affairs of the heart, most people like to be "asked." Often, indeed, they insist on a proper invitation.

He is a wise merchant who keeps the welcome sign constantly before the community in the form of ADVERTISEMENTS in the home paper. There everybody sees it —for ADVERTISING is "the light of directed attention."

Speak up. Light up. Hundreds of good customers are listening for your message and watching for your welcome sign in "THE NAPANEE EXPRESS."

The Outsider

By FLORENCE WARDEN

Author of "The House on the Marsh," "Something in the City," "No. 3, The Square," "The Lovely Mrs. Pemberton," "Our Widow," Etc.

"Oh, he made some statements much more important," said Mr. Bankes. "But, as I said, we need not go into that. He gave me his reasons for wishing to make a fresh will, and I am bound to say that they appeared to me to be the reasons of a man in full possession, not only of all his faculties, but of facts which made a change in his testamentary dispositions imperative. I therefore drew up a fresh will, and by his desire introduced some words into it by which he expressly repudiated the will which he had made earlier in the morning."

And Mr. Bankes crossed the room, took down and opened the same tin box in which he had placed the former will, and producing the second and later document, went back to his chair and began to read it aloud.

There was such a deep silence in the room while this went on that it seemed as if he was reading to the dead. The new will differed entirely from the former one. It was much shorter in the first place, and it began by stating that circumstances having come to the knowledge of the testator since he wrote the first will, a couple of hours before, which had opened his eyes to the fact that his provisions therein would do an injustice to his best friends, he now wished to make a fresh disposition of his property while he could act unbiassed by the presence or near neighborhood of any person who might be an interest in his affairs.

Here the doctor suddenly looked up. But Mr. Bankes, looking up also, met his gaze with one so unflinching, and withal so cold, that he at once declined for talk, and it was a long time before Carrie said,—

"Mr. Parkin! I must tell her, Lorimer, that it will be all right for the boy!"

"Yes. She seems a good-hearted sort of woman, and I'm glad you can do this. It was hard, Jolly hard, to be turned out like that, considering all things. Though she admits she helped herself to what she could, one can scarcely blame her. For if it hadn't been for the fit of passion in which he died, I suppose there's no doubt Samuel Parkin would have left everything to her and the child."

"That's what I feel," said Carrie, eagerly. "I should like the boy, when he grows up, to have half of everything. That would be fair, wouldn't it?"

"We'll talk it over with Bankes. He seems a shrewd fellow, and a kind-hearted one. There's no need to do too much, it might be as unjust as doing too little."

"And Madame Bertin, Lorimer, we owe a great deal to her. If she had chosen to side with that rascally doctor, she could have driven me away from the flat and prevented poor Dick's sending for the lawyer the second time."

"Yes, Madame Bertin's a brick, no doubt of it!"

"Oh, Lorimer, I can't bear to think of it all! It makes me cry! Poor Dick! Poor Dick! To think that there was no need for him to wrong himself after all. I could kill that Dr. Folgate! I believe he murdered Dick!"

Lorimer thought of his own suspicions, but he did not want her to be tortured by the thought of what might have happened in those dark watches of the night when the hapless Dick had no guardian but his crafty medical attendant.

"Oh, better put those fancies away!" he said, gravely. "They can do no good to anyone now!"

There was a pause. Then she said,—

"Lorimer! you won't have to be ashamed of me now!"

"Ashamed of you! I? Carrie!"

"I don't mean that. I mean—there needn't be any shabby suburb, or any beat about the business!"

He looked down at her tenderly.

"Well, I could have borne them all with you," whispered he. "Still, life will be pleasanter without those drawbacks. You're an heiress now, Carrie!"

Carrie, who was still tearful, tried to smile. It was nice to know the ends would need no tugging to make them meet any more.

It was about a fortnight later than this that the train from Paris brought Lorimer and Carrie to Ostend one afternoon. It was quite the end of September now, and even the glorious weather had not sufficed to keep the crowd of gay idlers at the watering-place.

Carrie and Lorimer got into the omnibus belonging to their old hotel, and drove there, both looking very grave and scarcely exchanging a word. They could think of nothing but the time when they stayed there together with poor Dick, then in the first flush of enjoyment of the fortune which was to bring so little luck to him.

When they reached the hotel they caught sight of Jean Basing at one of the windows. Her face lighted up, and by the time Carrie stepped inside the front door, two of the girls were shaking hands with her. Lady Basing, who at that moment crossed the hall, looked by no means pleased to see Jean and Maude thus employed. She frowned very overtonedly Carrie, knowing better than to make any comment to Jean at that moment, and held out her hand to Lorimer.

"And so poor, dear Mr. Desborough is dead," exclaimed she, with solemnity. "I saw it in the English papers, and it gave me inexpressible grief."

"How it must have shocked you!" said Jean to Carrie.

"It was dreadful!" cried she, with tears in her eyes.

Were his friends with him when he died?" went on Lady Basing with some curiosity.

A cloud passed over Lorimer's face.

"No," said he.

"Not even that delightful Dr. Folgate?"

"Yes, he was with him."

"I thought you said none of his friends were?"

"I believe I did say so, Lady Basing."

Jean drew near to her mother. She was shrewd enough to know that there was a story somewhere, a story it might not be discreet to touch upon.

"And his money, what becomes of that?" went on the elder lady, to the amusement and disturbance of the rest. "He had no near relations, and he wasn't married, I believe?"

"No, he wasn't married."

"I hope you have derived some benefit from it, as I am sure you deserved to do when you were such a devoted friend of his, Mr. Lorimer," went on the lady, quite unconsciously becoming more gracious as she spoke.

"Yes, I have—considerably."

"And now you are going back to England?"

"Yes, I'm going to look out for a house in the Isle of Wight."

"The Isle of Wight! I thought you were in the city?"

"I was. But thanks to a change of fortune I am in the city no longer."

"Ah! I am truly glad to hear it. You will be able to enjoy life better than one can in the smoke and the fogs!"

"Yes, indeed."

"I'm very fond of the Isle of Wight myself. Perhaps I'm in Cowes next summer I shall write to you, and insist upon your coming to see us."

"I shall look forward eagerly to your letter."

"Of course you'll go in for yachting!"

"I think so. Most people get drawn into it there, I suppose."

"And it's such a delightful amusement!"

"Yes."

"Mamma," whispered Jean in her mother's ear, "you haven't spoken to Carrie yet."

Lady Basing turned round haughtily.

Carrie, in deepest black, was standing in the background, very quiet and subdued amidst the chatter.

"I don't wish you to take any notice of her," she whispered. Lady Basing back as Lorimer spoke to the porter. "She's not a proper person for you to know, as I'm sure you ought to be after all. And to do her justice, the girl's quite ready to be left alone. No doubt she feels how awkward her position is, now that this brother, who was evidently not her brother, is dead."

But Lorimer was now speaking to the elder Carrie, and when he turned round Lady Basing felt constrained to say,—

"I see you are escorting Miss Desborough back to England."

Lorimer smiled as he laid his hand on Carrie's arm.

"I am escorting Miss Desborough now. Let me present her to you in her new character. Lady Basing: my wife."

(The End.)

Another Discovery.

An enthusiastic collector of curios entered the antiquarian's shop to have a look round. A young girl, evidently the daughter of the proprietor, stood behind the counter.

The collector examined one or two objects. Then he cupied upon the counter, resting on a piece of paper, what appeared to be around, yellow marble. Eagerly he pulled out his magnifying glass in order to view it more closely.

"That," he exclaimed excitedly to the girl, "is either a wonderful topax or exceptionally rare piece of amber. Where did you get it?"

The small girl eyed him for a moment, contempt with large on every line of her face.

"Garn," she said scornfully. "That's me bit o' barley sugar I just bin suckin'."—London Answers.

Gave It Away.

Among the side shows there was a collection of "freaks" including sword-ders, living skeletons, fat women, and so forth, according to a story told by Charles B. Cochran. About the only draw of the lot was the bearded lady. One day the regular attendant, who collected the admission money, was taken suddenly ill, and his place being taken by a little girl. A gentleman who had been deeply interested in this particular freak of nature, remarked casually to the child, as he was passing out: "I suppose, my dear, that the lady inside is your mother?" "No, sir!" the little girl replied, momentarily taken off her guard by the unexpected query. "She's my dad!"

Thinking of Father.

Stern Father: "I've never seen a report like this before. Aren't you ashamed of yourself?"

Backward Son: "Frankly, dad, I'm not. You promised me half a crown if I'd bring home a good report, and I thought you'd better economise."

American Indians' Origin Unknown.

No definite solution has been found in regard to the origin of the American Indian. Anatomically, the Indian bears a striking resemblance to the Mongolian. Therefore it is reasonable to believe that his ancestors originally crossed from Asia to North America. The period of this migration cannot be calculated accurately. It is believed, however, that man has existed in America at least 25,000 years and not more than 200,000 years.

Making Talking Machine Records.

The method of recording phonograph records was described. The record is first placed on a wax master record, by a process similar to electrotyping. This record is finally transferred to a solid metal plate. It is from this plate that the records are pressed. An unlimited number of records can be produced from a single plate. When vocal artists make records they sing into a small wooden or metal horn.

Misunderstood.

The veteran actress, Miss Ellen Terry, was once visiting an old lady, a pensioner of hers, who was indisposed and confined to her bed under doctor's orders.

She found the aged dame quite cheerful and chatty, despite her illness.

"I'm a hundred and two to-day," she told her visitor.

Miss Terry looked the surprise she felt. "But, surely," she said, "you told me a week or so back that you were only eighty-two."

"Oh, yes," replied the old lady, smiling at her visitor's mistake, "but I was talking about birthdays then. This is temperachures."

ASTHMA NEVER CAME BACK

Since Taking The Fruit Treatment in "Fruit-a-tives"

Read this letter from Mrs. J. M. Pennington of New Rockland, P.Q.

"In 1919, I was taken with Bronchial Asthma and no one knows what I suffered during the winter. I began having choking spells and would just gasp for breath and could get no sleep. The doctor said he could do nothing for me.

In the spring of 1920, I started taking "Fruit-a-tives" and soon the choking spells became easier and I have not had one since May 7th, 1920. It is such a relief to be able to go to bed and have no thought of having to get up in the night for an hour or more as I did all that winter, but never have to now, all because I take a "Fruit-a-tives" tablet every night.

FINE EXAMPLE OF BRAVERY

French Fortitude and Courage Praised in Really Splendid Example of Word Painting.

John Buchan's "History of the Great War" contains certain descriptions which the London Times believes "could be excelled by no living writer of history and by few of the past." The following paragraph, for instance, shows Mr. Buchan in a characteristic vein: "What shall be said of the soldiers themselves, who for these two months rolled back the invader? Not the Ypres salient or the nightmare labyrinth was more dreadful than those shattered Meuse uplands, churned into gray mud by the punctual shells, till they seemed like some lunar desert where life was forbidden. It was a struggle on the defensive, a contest of stark endurance waged with the knowledge that ground must some time be ceded, but with the resolve that the cession should be dearly bought. Such a task put the sternest strain on human nature. It requires not the exhilaration of hot blood and high spirits, but cold patience and disciplined sacrifice. The gilt commentators who, before the war, praised French elan and denied French fortitude were utterly put to shame. It was the fortitude and the stoicism of the French that were their most shining endowments. They showed it under Castelnau at Nancy and under Maud'huy at Arras; but Verdun was the apotheosis of the quality. Pushcart pas, sung the soldiers, and held the gate, a living wall stronger than concrete or steel. Through days of giddiness and torture, when the solid earth seemed crumbling beneath them, they maintained their ground. . . . Nor did the long doggedness of the defense impair the spirit of the offensive; when a counter-attack was needed it came as if from fresh men who had never in their lives done anything but move forward."

Vast Church Treasures.

Russian church treasuries have been among the richest in existence in late years. When Russ envoys were sent out by the then semi-civilized state in 987 to choose a national religion, they were impressed by the wealth and rich beauty of the services at Sancta Sophia. Since that time Russian churches have been marked by their wealth of ornamentation. Screens, ornamented with gems and precious metals were to be found in all of the well-to-do churches. In some of the richer institutions whose walls of sanctuaries were of silver and the floors were of jasper. Numerous icons were studded with jewels and some were almost completely covered with various precious stones. Some of the pulls used were practically small rugs of gems.

Probably the wealthiest of all religious institutions in Russia was the Lavra, or supermonastery at Kiev. Before the World war it had an income of $500,000 and a well-stocked treasury. The second most important institution, the Lavra of St. Sergius, near Moscow, had treasure with a present value of about $25,000,000. At the Cathedral of St. Isaacs, St. Petersburg, there was more than a ton of silver in the form of ecclesiastical vessels, and, in addition, much gold.—National Geographic Society Bulletin.

Sun-Loving Star Gazer.

She was a sun-loving Smith college freshman from the South, and although greatly interested in studying the stars, she found as the weather grew colder that she could hardly endure the night observing that her astronomy course required. So she took the advice of her friends and tried hats, fur coats, woolen stockings and warm gloves galore, but her hands and feet still froze and she was miserable. One night she appeared at the observatory with a beaming face and hands that were to stay warm. She had solved her perplexing problem. In either bulging pocket was a metal hot water bottle filled with the hottest water that her house could provide, and, although for the first night of her experiment her hands sought her pockets more often than her books, she now does her observing almost willingly.—Chicago Journal.

Canada's Musk Oxen

Of all the native wild animals of the Dominion of Canada, none is as little known as the musk ox; in fact, it is doubtful if one per cent. of the people of the country know of its existence, yet hundreds of these quaint beasts are found in the most uninhabitable part of the Barren Lands, writes G. Fairchild, D.L.S., in Canadian Forest and Outdoors.

These so called Barren Lands extend from a few miles east of Great Slave Lake to Hudson Bay and are bounded on the south by the timber line and on the north by the Arctic Ocean. Within this area for a distance of approximately one hundred and fifty miles along the banks of the Thelon river some fair-sized spruce is found. The balance of the country is varied from rolling to hilly with well grassed valleys in the western portion to rough, barren, rocky ridges with numerous lakes as one approaches Hudson Bay. During the summer of 1906 the writer made the trip across these Barren Lands as assistant to Mr. J. W. Tyrrell on a topographical survey for the Dominion Government. At a point about one hundred miles due northeast of Great Slave Lake, on the north shore of a small lake, called Sitton Lake by Tyrrell, after one of the Inter-lor, the Hon. Clifford Sifton, we saw our first musk oxen.

While crossing this lake, a gale arose necessitating our going ashore in the middle of the afternoon. After making camp Tyrrell and I decided to go a little prospecting and as the country was bare and no signs of caribou or other game were observed, we took our prospecting picks and left camp, leaving the rifles in camp, although we were in need of meat for the party. We proceeded leisurely along separate ridges of hills for when the chief wished us to join him. I hurried across the intervening valley and on reaching the top of the ridge found my companion gazing intently through his field glasses in a northerly direction. Focussing my glasses on the same point I saw a herd of musk oxen about three miles distant and on the far side of a deep bay of the lake. Fifteen were counted. We returned to camp and securing our rifles, cautiously aroused two of the Indians as all in camp had retired and were fast asleep, we noiselessly launched the canoe and stole quietly away from camp.

Knowing nothing of the habits of the musk ox except from the few articles of men who claimed to have seen and hunted them (one of these particularly stressed their wariness) we paddled cautiously and noiselessly across the bay and beached the canoe under a high bank. We crept quietly up this to a small knoll at the crest and cautiously peered over our cover to see two large bulls and three smaller oxen less than one hundred yards from us. Then they were moving quietly, some browsing and a couple were lying down, all plainly not suspecting the presence of their most deadly foes, man.

Each selected one of the large bulls, and whispering "Ready, Fire," let go simultaneously. The result was not exactly what we anticipated. Instead of two dead musk oxen lying before us with the others rushing for safety, the whole herd was in full view and observed came into view, just beyond the first five, and the whole nine started precipitately in our direction. Seven, apparently the remainder of the largest of the herd and apparent leaders were again shot and one fell while the other staggered along for a little but finally they were within fifteen yards of us and coming straight on and there was not the slightest doubt in my mind that they knew where we were for they were deliberately charging us. Both rifles were high powered 303 Winchesters and the aim was deliberate and sure and we knew that we were not missing as the maddened beasts fell one after another but seldom at the first shot. The distance at which we fired may be judged from the fact that both rifle magazines were emptied and were refilled before the rush reached us, but by that time they were only

TITLED AGRICULTURALISTS.

"Blue-bloods" Who Have Come to Canada.

Heading the list of titled agriculturalists of Western Canada is no less a personage than the heir to the British throne. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, though needless to say he farms only by proxy. The ranch consists of 1,400 acres of deeded land and 2,600 acres of leased land. It was stocked almost immediately with some of the finest animals of the royal farms in England, a move which resulted in the importation of a string of the best racing thoroughbreds Canada has ever seen, and the introduction to the prairies of the hardy little Dartmoor ponies. Shorthorn cattle and Shropshire sheep were also brought from England and the ranch herds are continuously being added to by fresh importations of superb stock. The introduction of such excellent livestock could not be without its beneficial effect on the western industry and the entry of animals from the E. P. Ranch at Western Canada's exhibitions has created new standards.

No less than three Canadian Governor-Generals have been attracted to agricultural pursuits in the country in which, for a period, they represented the British Crown, the Earl of Aberdeen, who was governor from 1893 to 1898, the Earl of Minto, who served from 1898 to 1904, and Earl Grey, who held office from 1904 to 1911. Strangely, in each case, the little section of the mighty Dominion they chose to cling to lay in the Prairies or across the Rocky Mountains.

The Prince of Wales may have been led, to an extent, in his selection of the Beddington Ranch by reason of its proximity to that of the Earl of Minto, for the two are situated in the High River country of Southern Alberta. The Earl of Minto's holdings consist of about two thousand acres of some of the finest ranching land in the West, stocked with a superb collection of animals.

Earl Grey, though his official seat was at Ottawa, crossed the divide of the Rockies into British Columbia when in search of a holiday where he could feel unconventionality free and put the worries of office completely away from him. In the Columbia Valley he acquired ranch property, which has, however, not yet been developed to be economically productive.

The third Governor-General, the Earl of Aberdeen, was for many years one of the biggest land owners and ranchers of Western Canada. By the acquisition of the Coldstream Ranch, which he developed out of forest, some thousands of acres at the northern entrance to the Okanagan Valley, he became intimately associated with fruit-growing in the Pacific Coast province. But a short while ago the property passed into the hands of a Scottish whiskey manufacturer and is managed locally by a Canadian.

Among the owners of large holdings in Western Canada is a fellow-peer from north of the Tweed the Duke of Sutherland, who, in 1909, after selling a portion of his Scottish estates, purchased some thousands of acres in the Brooks district of Southern Alberta.

There are possibly no better farmers in Canada than the emigrants from Scandinavian countries, and prosperous settlements of Norwegians and Danes are to be found throughout the Western provinces.

The Marketville colony is a settlement of prosperous dairy farmers, not the least industrious and successful of whom is Prince Eric, son of the King of Denmark.

Count Jodesco, an Italian nobleman; Count de Beaurieu, a well-born Frenchman, and many allied officers are among those who have adopted agricultural pursuits in Canada.

SHOWED LIFE IN OLD EGYPT

Remarkable Picture of Daily Routine of Thousands of Years Ago Revealed in Tomb.

It is difficult to believe that anything happening today is as significant or as interesting as things that happened in Egypt a few thousand years back. Besides, the history of present-day Egypt might as well be that of India or Syria or any number of other countries. The effort to attain self-relaxation, natural self-expression, is now a matter of stenciled pattern. It involves trite slogans. It makes use of the familiar weapons of boycott and strike. It is recklessly extravagant with ink.

I do not mean to belittle national aspirations—but the exploring mind finds greater novelty in the marvelous delineation of Egyptian life on the walls of Ti's tomb at Sakkara, Gertrude Emerson writes in Asia. The sacrificial bills are lobbied and thrown. Ti and his wife inspect the forced fattening of geese, the feeding of cranes in the poultry-yard. She kneels by his side, and together they watch the harvest operations, the reaping of corn, the loading of sacks upon the backs of asses, the reading out of grain by the oxen. Three village elders are brought to the estate office by overseers to give evidence concerning taxes. Ships are being built, with animated conversation going on among the workmen. Carpenters are sawing; men are blowing a furnace. The life of the Delta is depicted with a thousand intimate details. Ti is sailing through the papyrus marshes in a boat, superintending fishing and bird-snaring. Some of the men harpoon hippopotamuses while others draw in the fishnets and empty the narrow-necked baskets. A hippopotamus bites a crocodile. The chickets are filled with birds, fluttering about or sitting on their nests. Cattle returning from pasturage are led through the shallow water; one man carries a sheep on his back. Two dwarfs are seen leading a pet ape and a leash of greyhounds.

And I came up out of the crowded tomb with its marvelous lore of life and retraced my steps across the sand of the empty desert, where shards are strewn and bits of broken blue porcelain continually catch the eye, past the colossal statue of Rameses II, lying, prone in indignity, near the dirty little village of Mit Rahineh, which once was Memphis, and so back to Cairo, with its cosmopolitan uproar, its sophistication, its flaring hatred of Europe and its new-born interest in politics. The tomb seemed far closer to realities.

Honors More Than Even.

"I hear you got the worst of it with the little boy next door." I remarked to Harry. "Oh, I didn't get much the worser of it," asserted the little chap. "He licked me, all right, but my dog licked bofe his dog an' cat, too."

INDIANS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Community Had Its Origin In Indentured Laborers.

The Nationalists of South Africa have repeatedly threatened to drive the Indians into the sea, and their recent victory at the polls will bring about a crisis, says the Toronto Globe. The moderate measures of former Premier Smuts for safeguarding the welfare of the white and native populations against Asiatic invasion are the sole protection which the Indians have against the drastic remedies threatened by Nationalists.

The Indian community in South Africa, writes Brig.-Gen. F. G. Stone in the Fortnightly Review, had its origin in the indentured laborers brought into Natal between 1860 and 1911, particularly for working the sugar, tea and wattle plantations. They were given no pledge that they would be allowed to remain, but, on the contrary, were promised free passage back to India. The bulk of them, however, did remain, and drifted into other occupations, leaving plantation work to the Kaffirs. The census of 1920 showed that there were about 165,000 Indians in the country, of whom 136,000 were in Natal.

A Durban correspondent of the New Statesman of London paints an ugly picture of conditions. The Indians are a fertile, will sleep anywhere four or five in a bed, dwell resignedly in any kind of a rigged-up shanty, and regard sanitation and cleanliness as unnecessary luxuries. The inevitable result is that the Indian drives the European out of one occupation after another. Tailoring is rapidly becoming an Indian occupation; they are crowding into the furniture trade; menacing the printers, and have all but completely driven out the white leather-workers. The Indian traders can prosper on a basis of relatively low per cent. profit on landed charges; the white trader, not willing to sleep under the counter or do without decent food or sanitation, requires double or treble. The result is that in all but the larger towns in Natal and the Transvaal the Indian trader is supreme.

South Africa has, as yet, no organized system of rural public health administration, and the Indians live as they please. The result is that nearly every South African town is littered on its outskirts with Indian suburbs, the squalor of which is indescribable. There is a certain hillside in Durban; one slope, in the borough, is clean and well arranged with houses set amid blossoming shrubs. The other side beyond the boundary is a horror of congested, dirty Indian hovels, a mere hot bed of disease and demoralization. While these conditions prevail, says the correspondent, no European can live long in Natal without coming to feel some sympathy for the anti-Indian agitation.

South Africa wants the Australian solution, but no such easy solution is possible. The Indians are fellow-citizens brought to the country under definite promise to their Government that their well-being should be cared for. In the circumstances the policy of South Africa will be a supreme test of statesmanship. South Africa's task is to work out a form of society in which races of different grades and levels of culture can live together on terms of mutual good-will without injuring each other. It has never been achieved in the past, says the correspondent, but perhaps it may be South Africa's immensely significant destiny to evolve it.

W. I. MOVEMENT.

Interests Have Widened Much Since Inauguration.

The object of the Alberta Women's Institutes, says a recent little sketch of their work, is to unite the interest and enterprise of Alberta women to promote educational, social, moral and civic conditions, and compare methods of study and work by means of:

Holding, establishing and maintaining of demonstration lectures, short courses schools, travelling and other libraries, exhibition, competition, meetings, conventions and such other attractions as may from time to time be deemed useful for the promotion of the foregoing objects, or any of them.

The motto of the Women's Institutes is "For Home and Country" and there is no other phrase that explains the organization quite as well.

When the Women's Institutes were first started in Ontario, nearly thirty years ago, Mrs. John Hoodless (the mother of the organization) planned to organize a club which would assist women to be better home keepers. The study of Household Economics monopolized the program. Government assistance was given to standardize the work—the assistance was in the form of demonstration—lecture courses, reference material, etc. A college president has said that the club movement, as he knew it, "was the most successful university extension course in existence." This assertion particularly applies to the Women's Institutes, for these clubs are the Women's Education Extension Branch of the Dominion and various Provincial Governments.

Soon after the inception of the Women's Institutes the members found that their interests were gradually widening, from the home atmosphere to the community, from the community to the province and the whole country. Provincial Women's Institute organizations were established in each province of the Dominion. Rural, town and city women were brought together. The first subject for concentration was medical inspection of schools was the Women's Institute resolution. The Women's Institutes of Alberta have been instrumental in many cases in establishing splendid child-welfare work, rest room, community homes, organized recreation, co-operative markets, etc. Late years splendid work has been done in connection with the public schools—many institutes have established hot school lunches. All this work means that Alberta is rapidly becoming a better place in which to live.

In 1921 the Federal organization of the Women's Institute was accomplished which means that over 100,000 women are banded together for the welfare of Canada.

An Open Mind.

"We have called to see you about organizing a new party," said the spokesman of the delegation. "Are you in favor of the idea?"

"That depends," answered Senator Sorghum, "on which of the regular parties it's liable to take the most votes away from." — Washington Star.

AGRICULTURAL FAIRS

The Genesis of Agricultural Societies In Ontario

The First Association in Upper Canada—Birth of the Provincial Fair —Creation of the Department of Agriculture—Later Extension of Work.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

The honor of holding the first Agricultural Fair in Canada falls to Windsor, N.S., in 1765, about 159 years ago, and soon other Agricultural Societies fell into line in Nova Scotia, including one at Halifax in 1789 and another in King's County. This latter is the only one of the old societies in the Maritime Provinces that has survived the present day. The prizes offered at Windsor were in goods and medals. To the persons bringing the greatest number of cattle were awarded three yards of English blue superfine broadcloth and a silver medal. For horses, a saddle, bridle, whip, spurs and a medal were the rewards, and a churn for the best cow, while for the best twelve pounds of butter or cheese the prize was six yards of ribbon and a medal.

The progress of organizing Agricultural Societies in a newly settled country was naturally slow at first; but it is worthy of mention that the first Province to introduce imported stock was New Brunswick, which brought over, in 1826, four Shorthorn bulls, which were recorded in the first volume of the English Herd Book. A provincial exhibition was held in Fredericton, N.B., in October, 1852. An Agricultural Society was organized in Montreal in 1788 and another in Quebec in 1789.

The First Society In Upper Canada.

Settlement in Ontario commenced in 1782, and in 1791 had progressed sufficiently along the Niagara river and peninsula to justify the formation of an Agricultural Society on October 28 of that year. This pioneer Ontario society had its headquarters at Niagara-on-the-Lake, then known at Newark. Governor Simcoe took a great interest in it and was its first president. The first efforts of its members were directed to the holding of monthly meetings to discuss agricultural questions, and an agricultural library was also established. The holding of an exhibition naturally followed.

Agricultural societies gradually became organized all over Ontario, as settlement in the province progressed. In 1830, the Legislature passed regulations governing same and set apart grants. Eight hundred dollars was apportioned to each District Society to enable it to hold an exhibition in addition to the work it had previously undertaken.

An Agricultural Society for the County of York was organized in 1830. Seeds and implements were procured from the Old Country for members. A progressive member was sent to New York State who purchased four bulls for the use of the Society. Soon after an exhibition was held, and prizes were awarded for essays on agricultural subjects.

Birth of the Provincial Fair.

In 1845 a Provincial Association was formed, and in 1846 the first Provincial Fair was held in Toronto, out of which have grown the world-wide-known Canadian National Exhibition, the Western Fair and the Central Canada Exhibition.

The Provincial Association gradually became better organized and developed into the Agriculture and Arts Association, which did so much for the improvement of agriculture in the province in the earlier days. Among the many useful lines of work inaugurated were the establishment of the Veterinary College, the registering of pure bred stock and the awarding of prizes for the best kept farms and buildings and well cultivated fields, and, indirectly, the agricultural College at Guelph.

Creation of Department of Agriculture.

Agriculture soon became such an important feature in Ontario that a Commissioner of Agriculture was appointed; and eventually the Provincial Government created a Department of Agriculture, thus recognizing this basic industry as of equal importance with those which came under the supervision of the other departments of the Government. This out of that little society organized in 1791 in old Niagara-on-the-Lake, with a score or less of competitors and a modest prize list of a few pounds, have developed not only the three great exhibitions in the province, but also the important Department of Agriculture with its numerous branches and with local representatives in every county and district, bringing information and assistance to farmers desirous of making use of it.

Later Extension of Work.

The three hundred and sixty Agricultural societies in the Province of Ontario have made rapid progress of late years. In 1907 a new departure was inaugurated, and a grant was made by the Ontario Government for the holding of standing Field Crop Competitions, each society selecting the desired kind of grain or other crop to be grown.

With the exception of ten societies, which devote their energies wholly to the keeping and obtendance of pure bred male animals for which they receive certain grants, all the societies hold fall fairs and exhibitions at which stock and seed grain are also conducted with great success.—J. Lockie Wilson, Supt. of Agricultural Association.

Before you can have real good hogs of any breed you must have a good hog mother and a good hog sire. The idea is to raise big litters that will grow rapidly and large and make the most pork for the least feed.

The Wrong Cue.

There are said to be few wittier after-dinner speakers in the British Cabinet than Mr. J. H. Clynes. At a public banquet recently, at which Lord Desborough presided, he convulsed his hearers with a story about two laborers at a carworks. Both men were engaged in wheeling coke, and one of them discharged two barrow loads to every one by his mate. The foreman observed this, and said to the less energetic laborer: "Your mate is doing twice as much work as you." He received the delightfully naive reply: "Well, you shouldn't blame me for that. I've told him about it already."

With a flourish of many delightful new costumes a new season takes the stage. Fall Fashions are making their entrance with magic grace and subtle charm. And throughout the attractive autumn styles there sparkles a suggestion of Paris inspiration, in the alluring shades, in the fascinating beading designs, in the luxurious fur bandings.

During opening days, and those that follow, these new autumnal styles and fabrics will be on display in their proper settings. These "Riches in Beauty" you are cordially invited to inspect.

FALL COAT STYLES ARE GENEROUSLY FUR TRIMMED

It is difficult to escape the copper and the reddish brown shade in this season's range of Coats, but who wants to get away from them? They are generally becoming, in the height of the mode, and extremely good looking. From these reddish browns it is easy transition to the various shades in the "Brown" family which are all extremely good from light Castor and Sand through to Seal. In Sportswear shades of Brick, Green, Smoke and Rust are favored.

Furs are used liberally in coat ornamentations. They are applied in every conceivable manner. Luxurious furs are used in wide bands around the bottom, or for deep cuffs, or down the closing, or to form the collar.

The slender tube silhouette still remains the choice of all authoritative designers. Sleeves in the newest modes shirr to a snug fitting band at the wrists.

In coat fabrics we find unusual variety. Heavy ribbed pile coatings vie with high finished Marvella and cut pile suedes for popularity.

Coats in all their charm will be exhibited at our Fall Openings.

A REVIEW OF THE NEW FALL WOOLEN AND SILKEN FABRICS

In Silken Fabrics the season is rich in beautiful materials, and colors vie with colors in their pleasing harmony. The new reversible Satins are as beautiful on one side as on the other. Other favored fabrics are Crepe Canton, "La Belle" Crepe, Satin Duchess Flat Crepe, Vel-Chine, plain and cut Silk Velvets. Colorings are extremely handsome with shades as Mocha, Havana, Autumn, Chinese Blue, Elephant, Green, Rust and Gold topping the list.

In materials for autumn and winter coats designers have introduced numerous novelty weaves which portray elegance and charm. Popular among the new weaves to be featured by our Dress Goods Department during Openings will be Cut Velours, Camel Hair Stripes, Teddy Bear Cloths in stripes and plaids, Plain Velours and Striped Vellunna.

THE "TUNIC" IS THE DOMINATING MODE IN DRESSES

The tunic permeates the mode in dress circles. Its elongating touch is to be seen in dresses of wool, as well as silk. All are not tunics, however that so appears. Dress designers have clever ways of setting pieces on at hip or knee, applying trimming like fringe for instance, to stimulate tunics. Real or stimulated, it is all one in fashion.

The waist line position still remains low except only in evening dresses. Sleeves in tailored dresses, which by the way are extremely popular, remain wrist length, and are very snug fitting. Belts and girdles are conspicuous by their absence on all well-planned frocks. Neck lines of all types are good with round and low V shapes predominating.

In silken dress materials preference is given to Plain and Satin faced Cantons, Flat Crepes, Failles, Flamingo Crepe, Silhouette Crepe and Satin Fugereon.

In Woolens the new charmain weaves have no opposition. Shades of Castor, Cocoa, Mocha, Brown, Grey, Smoke, Pigtail, Powder, Turkestan, Green, Fawn, and Black are first in fashion.

REFRESHING DIVERSITY WILL BE FOUND IN FALL MILLINERY

At last the uniformity that has dulled so many seasons has given way to refreshing diversity. This applies to shapes, to sizes of models, to materials, and especially to trimmings.

It goes without saying that the smaller snug-fitting hat will be again popular. These have high crowns, some have square crowns in the postillion and directoire styles. Off-the-face effects are considered fashionable.

Spanish Combs of lace create a new note in trimmings. Feathers in diversified types are prominently featured especially those styled to represent wheels which are jauntly tacked to the sides of the hats. Ribbons and flowers also have a share in the trimmings.

Burnt Russet, reddish browns, all the mahogany and copper tones are being emphasized along with brown, navy blue and black.

As might be expected Velvet is the outstanding fabric, but hatters plush, duvetyn and felt also share much of the honors.
